“Little Steps, Lifelong Learning: Nurturing Young Minds Together”

Dear Parents and Young Learners,

At the heart of every child's learning journey lies curiosity, the sparkle in their eyes when they discover something new, or the pride in their smile when they complete a small task on their own. For our youngest learners, from Kindergarten to Grade 5, education is not just about lessons and books; it is about experiences, conversations, and meaningful connections.

In these early years, formative assessments play a very special role. They are not tests to grade or compare but gentle tools that help teachers and parents understand how a child learns best, what they have already grasped, and where they might need a little more support. These assessments allow us to reflect and modify the child's learning plan to make sure that each child is progressing happily and confidently, at their own pace.

At home, parents can make learning a natural part of everyday life. Counting fruits while arranging them, reading bedtime stories, drawing together, or simply talking about what happened in school can turn ordinary moments into joyful learning experiences. These simple activities help strengthen not only their understanding but also their bond with you. And when children feel emotionally connected, they learn more freely and fearlessly.

For our learners in Grades 1 to 3, gentle guidance and consistency are key. A short daily routine, a mix of reading, simple writing, and quick revision helps them stay organized and confident. Formative assessments from school can guide parents on what areas to focus on, helping children prepare for the summative or annual examinations in a stress free and balanced manner. Instead of last minute rushes, small and regular efforts help children build understanding steadily and calmly.

Teachers, on the other hand, closely observe and support each child's growth at school, offering extra help where needed and celebrating every milestone achieved. The bond between teachers and parents becomes the strongest support system for our young learners; when both work hand in hand, children feel encouraged, secure, and motivated to give their best.

Let's remember that learning, especially at this age, should never feel like pressure, it should feel like progress. With the right balance of care, communication, and collaboration, we can help every child enjoy learning, prepare confidently for their assessments, and grow into happy, independent thinkers.

With warmth and care

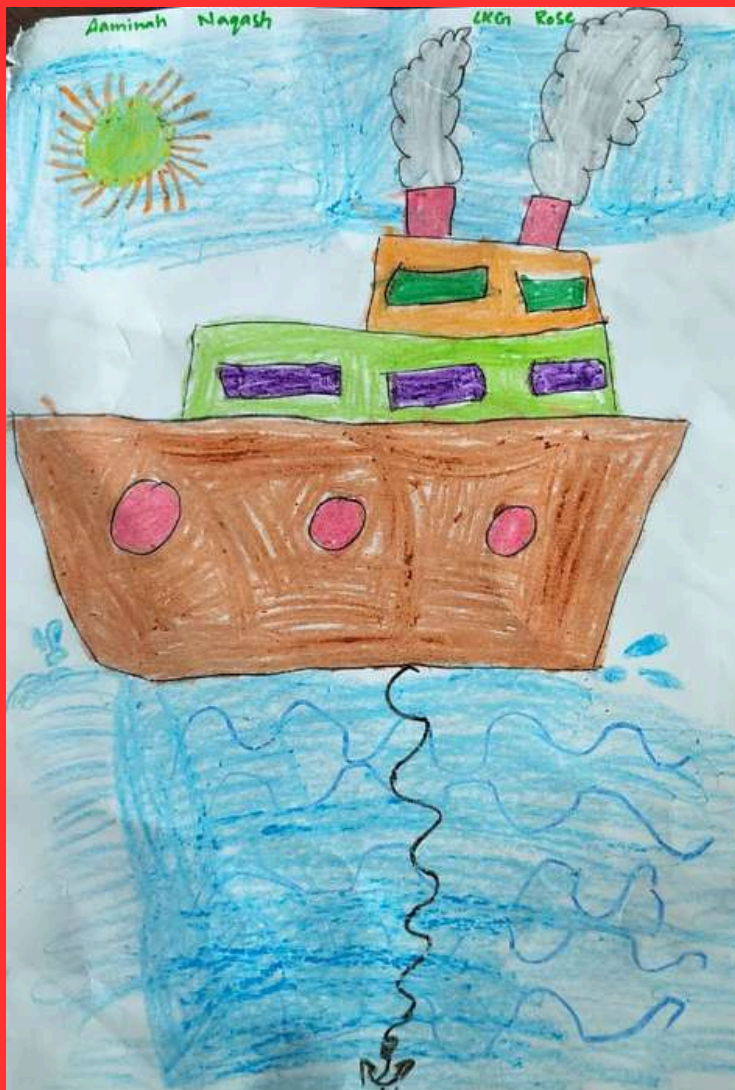

Syed Seherish Hashmi
Coordinator Grade 6
